POETRY.

I TOOK MY LUTE.

I took my Lute, once more to sing Those themes of love which still are dear; I took my Lute, but every string

Was glistening with a tear.

For oh, I thought of other days,
When one, who must not hear again
The song my simple chords might raise,
Had listened to that strain.

And wildly then I sought to wake The silence of my slumbering lute, And forced my trembling lips to break The spell which held them mute:

I found, too soon, had died away; And Love's own pure and sparkling words Were changed to sorrow's lay. How much that loved one had deceived;

As if my lips refused to tell What She no more believed. As if they both bad deemed it wrong That other ears should hear a tone, word of that impassioned song, They breathed for hers alone.

From the Liberia Herald of March 30.

FUNERAL AMONG THE NATIVES.

On Wednesday the 11th of this month, the obsequies of Betsy McKinzie, oldest daughter of old Mama, were performed on the Island, at present occupied by the retainers of that once wealthy and respectable family. rounding country, and became the residence of the Rich. Since the Hydra has been dislodged, and driven from this section of the country, it has been converted into a cemetery. Knowing the dignity of the family of may 29

3t. which the deceased was a member, we concluded the pomp, (or rather the mummery,) would be correspondent, and therefore at the time appointed, repaired to the scene. Arriving there, the first object which struck our vision, was one from which our civilized sensibilities recoiled:—the body was in a coffin considerably too much contracted in dimensions, to admit the top to go down to its proper place. Our readers can fancy the only method by which it could be attached to the sides; and that method was eventually resorted to .--The grave was dug in a house, which was covered with thatch, and enclosed on the sides with mats; on which, the corpse was placed on an elevation, raised by the earth from the excavation. Shortly after our arrival, the ceremony commenced; the dancers were in one group, and mourners in another. The former performed their part by marching in regular procession, through the town, displaying and firing muskets; making a circuit each time, of the house containing the body, and dancing, or rather dodging to the most inharmonious sounds, to which the term music was ever prostituted; at the same time writhing their whole frames into every contortion and gesticulation, of which they were capable. The dancing procession, consisted of very ancient women; and among the latter, was one over whom, in our opinion, a hundred rainy seasons have howled their thunder, who displayed a degree of animation and muscular vigour, that was truly astonishing. We were almost led to conclude that the old ing. We were almost led to conclude that the old matron had discovered the Philosopher's stone, that the Alchymiets so any perform the Alchymiets so any performance of the Philosopher's stone, that the Alchymiets so any performance of the Alchymiets so any performance of the Philosopher's stone, that the Alchymiets so any performance of the Philosopher's stone, that the Alchymiets so any performance of the Philosopher's stone, that the Alchymiets so any performance of the Philosopher's stone, that the Alchymiets so any performance of the Philosopher's stone, that the Alchymiets so any performance of the Philosopher's stone, that the old public stone of the Philosopher's stone, that the Alchymiets so any performance of the Philosopher's stone, that the Alchymiets so any performance of the Philosopher's stone, that the Alchymiets so any performance of the Philosopher's stone, that the Alchymiets so any performance of the Philosopher's stone, that the Philosopher's stone, the Philosopher's stone, that the Philosopher's stone, th the Alchymists so anxiously, but vainly sought.

Near a house, in front of that containing the corpse, Far Gay, (noted for juggling abibilties) was submitting a number of women to trial on the following ceremony; each woman was provided with a small stone or pebble, and into a small brass kettle placed in the midst, each was separately made to throw her pebble, pronouncing in the act, this invocation. "If I kill this woman, (alluding to the deceased) God must kill me just as I throw this stone into this kettle." This ceremony has reference to a belief existing in all the African tribes along and into a small brass kettle placed in the midst, each ence to a belief existing in all the African tribes along this part of the coast, that no rich person dies by the visitation of God; their death is always the result of the evil machinations of their domestics, political rivals, or other interested persons. This being done, the pebbles were, with all due form, placed in the head of the coffin. The deceased was then harangued, but what the orator said, not understanding the language, we were unable to comprehend. We were, however, afterwards told he exorted her to take vengeance on her murderers. Every emphatical word of the orator was responded by a stroke on the breast of the deceased (the lid of the coffin being off,) with a stick, which, when the harangue was over, was placed in the coffin. A razor was next brought, and placed between the clothes that enveloped the body; with which we were told, she would inflict death on the one that witched her. After this, a sheep was immolated, and held while bleeding, alternately over the grave and the body, until both were pretty well stained. Powder was next put in requisition, and ignited on the body. The eulogium was then pronounced, in recitativo, which gradually melted into a tolerably solemn dirge. The performer occupied so much time, that others who were anxious to participate in the honor of officiating became weary, and manifested considerable impatience; a deep growl, however, from Far Gay, brought the orator to a close. Far Gay immediately commenced, and occupied the remainder of the time allotted to this part of the ceremony.

On being informed that the body would not be deposited, until the rice for the deceased's dinner was ready, we stepped to the house of mourning. There shall receive the above reward. we saw a dozen women, ranged in columns on the ground, pouring forth the most bitter lamentations, writhing and twisting the muscles of their faces, with evident labor, if possible, to discompose their lachrymaries, and cause an egress of "eye water." This scene afforded us the most conclusive evidence of the difference between mourning and grieving: old Mama wept without any difficulty; her tears were the overflowing of a heart big with grief; those of the others, were the result of the contrivance of mercenaries procured for the occasion, or of domestics who endeavored to please the mistress, by thus expressing their attachment to the daughter; but who, no doubt, wept as many on such occasions, in other, and civilized sections of the earth weep, that their masters have just died .-Rice being ready, we were notified that the deposit was about to be made, and repaired to the spot. A bowl of rice saturated with palm-oil and neatly served up was placed in the head of the coffin: the top was then put on and the whole lowered in the grave. Four men Jumped on it, who with those on the outside, commenced throwing on the earth with their hands, and in a few minutes the excavation was completely filled up. As soon as the earth was placed on the spot, the dancing tribe was called in; and they performed their part by Lombard & WillTMORE, No 31 Commercial wht. minutes the excavation was completely filled up. As darcing to the music, following each other in a circle, and crossing the grave about midway. This mode of dancing was soon abandoned, and a resort had to another, unusual, at least, in the civilized world, which was by kneeling, and accompanying the discontinuous accompanying the discontinuous and accompanying the discontinuous an by kneeling and accompanying the discordant beat of Long wharf. the drum, by regular and well-timed pulsations of the hands, on the ground, until the place that covered the newly deposited tenant, showed no indications of having been lately disturbed.

and which Far Gay endeavoured to persuade us, would ] inevitably catch the person that witched the deceased.

It is really to be lamented that these poor deluded people are so ignorant, as to be thus imposed upon. That the great mass of them believe this string possesses a charm, we have no doubt; consequently, whoever should be accused by the headmen, of the death of this woman, will by general consent be found guilty. In such cases, evidence is never thought of; simple accusation, by any one, is conclusive evidence; and that some one will be accused before three months have rolled away, we have no doubt; and wo be to the person, if he should not be able to purchase a commutation of punishment; perpetual slavery will be the inevitable consequence. Thus the artful and designing headmen keep the people in ignorance, that they may more easily dupe them.

FOR PRESIDENT, AN WASAR A A W BRE BERGA.

FOR VICE PRESIDENT GREG BE & BE UB TE. BORENSON.

The Hantsvinkers and the Hoodwinked .- The an race may be divided into two great classes -the hombeinkers and the hodwinked or the deceivers and the dunes those who perform their part of the tabour of life, and earn their brend by the sweat of their brow, and those who, while pretending to instruct them in the duties of life, are fattening in idleness upon the labours of the former. One class wear the crowns laurels, and enjoy most of the dignities of church -the other class are clothed in sackcloth, and do penance in dust and ashes. The former are the idle, the mercenary, the extortionary, who call themselves the good, the great and the wise! the latter are the industrious, the laborious, the productive citizens of the community, or the publicans and sinners. The former possess all the glory, the honour, the decency, the weidth, the wisdom and the righteousness; the latter endure all the reproach, the shame, the poverty, the ignorance and the labour. The former are the committers and the pardoners of sin-the doers of evil and the punishers of crime ;-the latter are the performers of good works, and the subjects of pardon and punishment. One class see with their eyes open ; the others have been blindfolded from their infancy. The former are those who manage the affairs of others, who heal diseases, pardon sins, administer the laws, and sit on high stations to be glorified by the people. The latter are those who attend to their own business-who take medicine-are pardoned of their sins, and who humbly worship at the shrine of rulers and demagogues. The former are the receivers of goods, wealth, titles, and distinctions; the latter are the producers of the goods, and the worshippers of greatness and dignity. If there were no defenceless animals, there would be no birds and beasts of prey -if there were no foolish and incantious insects, there would be no spiders to weave their webs-if there were no dupes, there would be no deceivers-if there were no fools there would be no hypo-

Lawyers .- By some some reasoners it is argued, that as lawyers only fully and clearly understand the laws, they alone ought to be entrusted with the business of legislation. It is true, undoubtedly, that lawvers understand what may be called the architecture of law better than others. They would more readily detect a flaw in the wording of a new act, than the individuals of other professions. They would not be so apt to make laws over again which had already been enacted; or to make " new laws which are incompatible with old ones, before the latter had been repealed. In building a house, an individual gives his plan to the architect, who builds it accordingly. The former knows best what kind of a building would suit his purposes, but the latter knows best how to construct it. Thus it is with the people and the lawyers. The former must decide for themselves what new laws and regulations ought to be made, while the latter should be employed in giving them form, and engrafting them upon the present system. If lawyers, only, were employed in making laws, they alone would reap benefit from them. It is not to be expected that they would have more disinterestedness than any other class of men are known to possess. The community must employ lawyers to enforce and interpret the laws, not to make them -as ministers are employed to preach the gospel, not to make it.

The Nomination .- It would be an endless undertaking to attempt to correct all the misrepresentations respecting the proceedings of the National Convention, which have been and may be fabricated by our political opponents. They are so fruitful in expedients of the kind, that as fast as one false assertion, like base coin, is nailed to the counter, another is started in its place. -A statement is now going the rounds with them that a trick was devised and carried into effect, to secure a vote of two-thirds for Col. Johnson upon the first ballot, and nothing more; and this, it is alleged, was effected by dividing the vote of the Massachusetts delegation, giving to Col. Johnson four votes and Mr Rives ten .-Those who were present upon the occasion know that it was neither magic nor deception by means of which the vote of that state was thus divided .- Baltimore Repub ican.

The ten votes of Massachusetts were given to Mr Rives, in conformity with the nomination of that gentleman by the caucus of the Democratic members of our Legislature, held last winter; and by whose recom-

Four votes were given to Col. Johnson, either in of borrowed light," conformity with the instructions of the district conventions, or with the public sentiment in the districts which | ter's. those delegates represented.

Error Corrected .- The statement which has been so industriously circulated by the Bank press, that Mesara Stockton & Stokes, and Roeside had been required to refund large sums of money to the P. O. Department, turns out to be entirely without foundation. The P. M. General has determined to withhold the payment of balances due to these gentlemen, and some others. public interest.

Consistency .- Major Noah's Washington correspondent states that the President has declared that his personal feelings were in favor of Judge White for the next Presidency, and yet every opposition paper in the country accuses him of appointing his successor, in the person of Mr Van Buren.

The old warfare.-The Springfield Republican ways-"New England morality must be very much flattered by the nomination of Richard M. Johnson, for Vice President," and yet the Republican supports Dan iel Webster for the Presidency! We suggest to the Republican to remember the old adage :-

"He who lives in a house of glass,"
Should throw no stones at those who pass."

A Broad Joke. The Springfield Republican says it goes for Webster as the true democratic Whig candidute for the next Presidency. Mr Webster a demogras !- the fellow is mad !
